INTRODUCTION

Research for the Waterloo Township history involved building frameworks of ideas, trends and statistical data. We were able to reconstruct a cross-section of township society by linking data from several sources for the year 1861.<sup>1</sup> The framework reported here is more longitudinal. Assessment roll data were extracted and encoded for ten sample areas, scattered throughout the township, at 10-year intervals from 1861 to 1951.

We had several purposes in undertaking this task:

1. Generally, we needed a framework of information about patterns and trends in land use and social organization spanning as much as possible of the history of Waterloo Township. We also wanted to trace processes of landownership and tenancy, including (at various times) tendencies to subdivide or consolidate property, and thus shed light on business success and failure, the ups and downs of families, and the impacts of farm improvement and suburbanization.

2. We needed evidence of agricultural land use and production, notably in the period of the township's history for which other data are lean, the 1860s to the 1920s.

3. While manuscript data for households and families from the decennial Census of Canada are now released up to and including the census of 1901, they cannot be pinned down to place as can information from the assessment rolls.

4. Published census data, while used to the utmost in research for the township history, are of limited value. At best, they provide nothing below the level of the whole township, and some data in some census years are not even available at the whole township level. Waterloo Township has a large area and a long and complex history. We needed deeper and more finely textured research in order to reconstruct its mosaic of communities.

5. Our selection of sample areas was guided by our need to provide a framework for oral history recollections, land and farm records, and memorabilia for particular farm families, and compilations such as Tweedsmuir histories.

We transcribed and encoded assessment roll data for the whole township in 1831 and 1861, and for the ten sample localities in the years ending in -1 from 1861 to 1951. After 1901, data for most small lots of under 10 acres was omitted. The ten areas, shown on the map, together made up about one-sixth and one-seventh of the whole township area in each year. For each, we also conducted land title searches in the abstract indexes of deeds at the Waterloo Land Registry Office and also collected information from directories, manuscript census schedules, and maps and plans. Families and/or local historians in each of the sample areas graciously shared details of land ownership, land use, family relationships and activities, and local organizations such as schools, churches, clubs and societies of any kind (Sunday Schools, literary societies, Women's Institutes, farmers' clubs, sports teams and clubs). Evidence included title deeds, subdivision or assessment plans, farm diaries and accounts, family histories and genealogies, photographs, maps and plans.

Case studies based on these sample localities are used in all chapters of Waterloo Township through two centuries. For an effective graphic summary using the varied sources of information, see Colour Plate 3 on page 5.

SAMPLE AREAS

The ten areas were chosen to represent different parts of the township and to include known family farmsteads and other activities for which we have evidence and some current contacts. Each sample usually includes century farm(s), includes or adjoins a schoolhouse, and is described in a Tweedsmuir history.

1. Bechtel's Tract, including the Steckle family farm (now commemorated by the J. Steckle Heritage Homestead), as well as farms owned by the Battler, Becker, Cressman, Culp, Fischer, Hagedorn, Hilgartner, Holtzhauer, Israel, Karcher, Kesselring, Latsch, Miller, Reiber, Rellinger, Riehm, Shantz, Snider, Weaver and Weber families. Smaller lots and the houses of labourers and tradesmen were clustered in the hamlets of German Mills and Williamsburg. Most of this sample area comes within the scope of the Helena Feasby Tweedsmuir history.

2. The Bloomingtondale sample consists mainly of Wilson's Tract Lot 5 and German Company Tract Lot 69, but with parts of other lots as ownership overlapped. Among the family farms are those of Bechtel, Bingeman, Bischy, Bowman, Cressman, Erb, McAllister, Oberholtzer, Shantz, Snyder and Strong. Labourers and tradesmen with small lots lived around the hamlet of Bloomingdale. The locality is well described in the excellent Tweedsmuir history by the Schweitzer sisters.

3. Breslau East (mainly German Company Tract Lots 108 and 109), includes farms owned by the Break, Cressman, Dedels, Dessler, Heckendorn, Mader, Jacob Y. Shantz and Ezra Snyder families, as well as many labourers and others with small lots in the village of Breslau. Additional information is available from the Maple Grove Tweedsmuir history.

4. Bridgeport East consists mainly of German Company Tract Lots 108 and 109, with farms owned by the Detweiler, Eby, Erb, Kraft, Martin, Oberholtzer, Schweitzer, Shepherd, Schneider, Weber and Ziegler families. The sample also includes smaller lots in the hamlet of Rosendale and the village of Bridgeport (east side). The eastern end of this sample is described in the Bloomingdale Tweedsmuir history while the rest comes within the scope of the Bridgeport Tweedsmuir.

5. The Centreville sample, comprising German Company Tract Lots 53 and 54, includes a few large farms owned by the Bowman, Dippel, Erb, Jansen, Lewis, Moss, Shantz, Sherk, Thaler families and, especially, Abraham C. Weber in the mid- to later nineteenth century. But this locality was early affected by the Berlin-Preston highway and exurban subdivisions related to Berlin-Kitchener's growth. Some additional information is contained in the Centreville Tweedsmuir history.

6. The Clochmohr sample is named for the Cowan family farms that formed the core of the locality southeast of the Clearview school in Beasley's Lower Block, Concession 2, Lots 1 to 5 (as well as parts of Concession 1). Other enduring family names include Ferguson, Gingrich and Scott. This locality came within the urban influence of the town and city of Galt and was annexed by Galt in 1960. Additional information was obtained about the Cowan family from Jim Barrie and about the Shaw family from Marion Shaw. The locality forms part of the community described in the Mill Creek Tweedsmuir history.

7. The Erbsville locality considered here consists mainly of German Company Tract Lots 28, 43, 44 and 45 in the northwestern corner of the township. Longtime families with farms of at least 100 acres included the Bisch, Dehler, Eby, Erb, Hunsberger, Kienapple, Kraft, Neuber and Schnarr families. Other families lived on smaller lots in and around the hamlet of Erbsville. Valuable further information about the locality has been provided by Howard Schnarr (partly in his family history, The Schnarrs from Erbsville).

8. Lexington locality is defined here as German Company Tract Lots 60 and 61. In the first half of the nineteenth century, GCT60 was owned by the Brubachers and GCT61 by the Wisslers. John Wissler who in 1835 had established the Eagle Tannery to the northeast, on a creek close to the Grand River, subdivided a small area of GCT61 into lots for labourers in 1856. These and other nearby smallholdings were taken up by labourers and tradesmen who combined work for larger farmers with shops in Bridgeport or Waterloo. For an illustration of the Lexington village in relation to larger surrounding farms, see Figure 34 and Table 14 on pp. 204-5 in Waterloo Township through two centuries. Families with full-size farms in this locality at some time between 1861 and 1951 included Samuel Brubacher, A.B. Caya, Aaron Erb, Jacob Groff, Moses Hunsberger, Henry Keffer, Richard Quickfall, Louis Roedding, George Schneider, Jacob Y. Shantz, the Snyders, the Stricklers, Strohs and Webers. Enduring families with smaller holdings were the Boettgers, Drudges, Hasenpflugs, Heintzes, Jacobis, Koerbers, Meyers, Moyers, Melitzers, Piatkowskis, Reicherts, Schmidts, Schultzes and Siegmans. Helga Hartman kindly shared the results of her research on the Lexington community.

9. The New Germany locality (now Maryhill) is well-known as the larger community founded in the 1830s by Roman Catholics from Alsace around the nucleus of what became St Boniface Church and the SS 13 school that became the first Separate school in the township in the 1880s. Defined here as properties in the German Company Tract Lots 80 and 81, New Germany in the nineteenth century had a large population of Roman Catholic families on quite small lots. Enduring families with farms of at least 100 acres were the Benningers, Hummels, Rellingers, Zettels and Zingers. Further information was generously provided by Joseph Zinger of the Historical Society of St Boniface and Maryhill.

10. The Riverbank locality, consisting of German Company Tract Lots 102, 111, 116 and 126 at the core of SS 15 (Riverbank). Among enduring farm families were especially the Hageys and Scheirich/Shirys, but also the Bears, Pranges, Sauders/Souders, Schiedels, and Zellers. Much of this area was expropriated in the 1940s for the Waterloo-Wellington Airport. Described in the Maple Grove Tweedsmuir history.

ORIGINS OF THE ASSESSMENT SYSTEM

Part of the value of assessment records for historical and genealogical research reflects the long period during which they have been part of local administration. Assessment and/or collectors' rolls are extant for most of the municipal life of Waterloo Township from 1850 to 1972. Some records survive for the preceding era, as well, when the township was part of the Gore District administered from Hamilton and the Wellington District (from Guelph).

All property-holders of Upper Canada were subject to assessment and taxation, under the 1815 act which required the assessor "to demand and receive of and from each and every ratable inhabitant...a list of all the Ratable Property, real and personal in his, her or their possession in the Province, which list shall be taken annually."<sup>2</sup> In practice, the assessor "did not enter the premises of the men assessed, but contented himself with asking them, usually on town meeting day, in what kind of house each lived, how many stoves and fireplaces there were in each house, how much arable and meadow land, how many cattle, horses, sheep and pigs each possessed... The assessor made no attempt at valuing the various possessions, his designation being therefore a misnomer. The value to be assigned to each acre, horse or cow was determined by provincial statute."<sup>3</sup>

The assessor's list, called an assessment roll, was delivered to the clerk of the peace in the district town, where the values and direct taxes were calculated. A district rate was struck to pay for anticipated costs of the justice system, roads and public works--with a limit of two pence in the pound on the assessment. As well as the general tax, there were two special rates--one to provide a salary for members of the Provincial Assembly (levied until 1840), the other to pay for building and maintaining asylums for the insane (fixed at one-eighth of a penny per acre until 1857).<sup>4</sup>

In 1820, taxes were reported to be low: all rateable property (livestock and houses) was taxed at one penny on the pound, cultivated land at one penny per acre, waste land at one farthing per acre.<sup>5</sup> In 1840 uncultivated land was assessed at 4 shillings per acre and cultivated land at £1 per acre. By the late 1840s, land was taxed at a fixed rate per acre but more than half the assessment came from buildings and property which were assessed at the same levels as in 1840: £20 for a squared or hewn log house under 2 storeys; £25 for a framed house under 2 storeys (plus £5 for each additional fireplace more than one); £30 for a squared or hewn log house of 2 storeys (plus £8 for each additional fireplace more than one); £40 for a brick or stone house under 2 storeys (plus £10 for each additional fireplace more than one); £60 for a frame brick or stone house of at least 2 storeys (plus £10 for each additional fireplace more than one). Water-powered grist mills with one run of stones were assessed at £150 (plus £50 for each additional run of stones); saw mills at £100; merchant shops £200; stallions kept for service £199; horses three years and more £8; oxen four years and more £4; milch cows £3; young cattle £1. A closed carriage with four wheels was assessed at £100; an open carriage with four wheels at £25; carriages and gigs with two wheels £20; pleasure wagons £15. The rates for distilleries and dogs could vary.<sup>6</sup>

After township government was established in the 1850s, there were one assessor and one collector for each of the five wards. Local assessors valued land, real property and businesses, and the finer categories were dropped. In the twentieth century, several changes were made in the system of property assessment and collection of local taxes, with the same persons sometimes sharing assessor and collector roles for a particular ward/electoral division. From the mid-1940s, a salaried assessment commissioner was made responsible for the whole township, while the salaried clerk-treasurer ran the township office including the recording of taxes due and paid.

Notes

<sup>2</sup> Legislation relating to assessment is printed in A collection of acts passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, particularly applying to the Province of Upper Canada (York: printed by R.C. Horne, 1818), and discussed in David Wood, "Reflections on administering a forested agricultural frontier," Canadian Geographer 36,3 (1992): 254-179. Wood notes that the 1815 act (which replaced earlier 1811 and 1807 acts and prescribed a model form for recording assessment) was the first to be fairly effective, partly because taxes were to be paid to the district in which the land was located.
